Growth and Manufacture of Wool in

On these subjects a Georgia journal, the Savannah Republican has some very suggestive remarks. Adverting to the fact that the woolen manufactories of the United States have to rely upon foreign countries for about one-third to one-half of the wool they consume, it sets forth the unequaled facilities possessed by the Southern and Western states for sheep-raising and wool-growing. In allusion to its own State, it sees no reason why it should not raise lifty times as much as very little more trouble and expense. This provides the money to met the liability, or remark will apply as well to Tennessee as to « Georgia. We have in this State a vast extent of cheap lands admirably adapted to sheep-raising, and which are lying idle and unproductive. And it is in the immense area of land in the United States, and its great cheapness, as compared with the price tage we have over European wool-growers.

In climate, too, in the South and South-West, we have a decided advantage over as well as over the more Northern sections of many of the sheep-raising districts of Europe, the United States. This advantage of climate, moreover, in the South and South-West, is not counterbalanced by any corresponding disadvantage-it having long since been established by the most thorough, practical tests, that as far South as the perhaps further, there is no deterearotion in
